

2025 Annual Report

In a recent interaction with “Debra,” a 67-year-old homeless woman, I found myself with no words. We sat against a brick wall surrounded by plastic sacks filled with her life belongings as she perseverated about the loss of her child, the loss of her husband, and the breakdown of other family relationships. She was disheveled, her long gray hair unkempt and matted to her brow from sweat, but it was what and how she spoke that revealed she was more than homeless. She was heartbroken. I could only pray and as I did, she leaned her head into my arms and wept. I did, too. The brokenness of her life is so distant from one that flourishes.

What does it mean to flourish?

Leaders across the nation are asking this question more frequently. More so, people are interested in how to attain it. Even universities are now studying it. Harvard just released the results of its Global Flourishing Study in April of 2025. They looked at character and virtue, meaning and purpose, life satisfaction and financial stability, among others.

We just need to look at the Bible. Our founding passage, Isaiah 58:11, is a picture of flourishing: The LORD will always lead you, satisfy you in a parched land, and strengthen your bones. You will be like a watered garden and like a spring whose waters never run dry. More than just a picture of a flourishing life, it's a promise. But, reading the handful of verses before it reveals that it's a promise contingent on how we help the poor.

How are we helping the poor?

It's an important question if a flourishing society is tied to its answer. When I ask myself that question, there is one primary response that comes to mind: as distinct, unrepeatable individuals uniquely created in the image of God.

This priceless value of the individual compels us to extend our lives...

This perspective is held by the entire team at Watered Gardens and it immediately vaults every person who comes through our doors far above an object of charity, but rather a subject with agency, autonomy, and capacity to contribute. This priceless value of the individual compels us to extend our lives to the poor sacrificially and with great hope for a flourishing future.

This is fleshed out in the various programs you'll read about in this report and I hope you're inspired by some of the outcomes that are shared.

How the poor are helped matters. And as recent policy changes will increase the pressure for the unsheltered homeless to find shelter, the demands will increase on our mission. Be assured we won't lose sight of the “how.” Debra and every other person we'll encounter this next year has immeasurable value, worthy of Jesus' sacrifice, and as we join Him in it, we'll remind each one that God intends for them to flourish, too.

A front-line ministry to those needing food, clothing, and a place to lay their heads, the Outreach Center provides over 50 beds for men and women, including a respite shelter for those needing additional time to recover after leaving one of our local hospitals.

"Finding Watered Gardens was the best thing that could have happened to me. When I was dropped off, I'd never been homeless before, and only knew what I'd seen on TV. I was scared and thought I wouldn't be able to sleep at all. But that very first night, I felt such an overwhelming sense of security and safety that I had the best night of sleep in a long time. I didn't even think there was a God, but now I know that peace was from Him. I found Jesus there at Watered Gardens—got saved and baptized and became an avid Bible reader. I also made some really good friends who I still talk to almost every day." - Danalee, Former Mission Guest

Project Worth leverages the power of business to lift people out of poverty. We implement the principle of exchange, which affirms human dignity in our clients who learn work skills while generating revenue for the ministry through goods made and sold.

"I drank so much that I had a stroke in my 30s. And then I got kicked out of a recovery program for relapsing—but that's when God opened a door for me at Watered Gardens. They've helped me find faith in God, and Dan, the kitchen manager, has become like a brother. Even when I was drinking, I always worked, but Dan's helped me see it's not just work; it's service. His attitude's really rubbed off on me and made going to work each day so much more meaningful."

A long-term residential recovery program, Forge Center for Virtue & Work welcomes men coming from poverty, addiction, and incarceration into a 16-month focus on character development and work readiness. Graduates are full-time employed, independently housed, off of all government assistance, and active in a local church.

"I don't wish my bad times on anyone, but I do wish everyone could have my same experience in The Forge—to put everything else on pause until you settle what matters most. When it finally clicks that God truly is a Father to you, and Jesus gave Himself for you, and the Holy Spirit is actually there in you, you stop trying to live for God and let Him live in you. Let that sink in—God living His life in us. That's what the Forge is all about: getting renewed, not by following rules, but by Christ alive in us."

A 5-year-old campus designed to keep children with their mothers in times of crisis or chronic homelessness, Washington Family Hope Center currently provides 15 family units, each able to house a mom and up to four children, while the family re-stabilizes and sets a new course for holistic flourishing.

"I've had a life-changing experience moving into Washington Family Hope Center. The amount of love and care we get from the other girls and the employees there are unmatched! We are family! Very blessed to be here and start this new journey, with our best feet forward."

CareCoordination

Serving all campuses and neighbors in need, the Care Coordination staff and volunteers meet regularly with guests and friends in the community to set and achieve goals toward health, wellness, and self-sufficiency.

"When you come in here, everyone is so friendly. The Care Coordination team sits down, talks with you, and finds out what you need. Then they put a plan together with you to do what needs to be done. Even just being able to speak with someone in person and be heard matters a lot. When you talk, they actually listen."

Volunteer Update

With a ministry designed to serve the Church in its mission to help the poor, Watered Gardens only has 24 full-time employees across all ministries, relying on the church to provide volunteers who love Jesus and are ever-growing in their understanding and administration of effective charity.

"I had been part of a lot of 'feel-good' charity over the years—doing some act of service for people, but having no relationship or connection with them. At Watered Gardens, I've learned that true charity can't be distant or impersonal. It requires coming alongside someone and getting to know their story. That takes daily prayer and patience because it's a journey, not an instant fix. That doesn't always feel good—but it IS good."

The national educational subsidiary of Watered Gardens, True Charity provides workshops, online resources, and educational tools in an effort to make local, outcome-driven, privately funded charity the norm again in the United States.

"What I love most of being a part of the Network is relationship building. The tools that [True Charity] has, we don't need to reinvent. It's already there. We just have to use it and apply it."
